Tenth Year, No. 16

GLEICHEN, ALBERTA, THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1916

Per Year $1.50

Pte. John W. Weddel Killed in Action

Ottawa, Ont., July 4.—Mrs. Annie Weddel, Gleichen, Alberta. Deeply regret to inform you that Private John William Weddel of infantry is officially reported killed in action on June 24th, 1916. Will send you further information when received. Officer in charge Record Office."

The above message was received Tuesday by the brave young soldier's parents, and when reported about town the deepest regret was expressed for the bereaved aged father and mother and three sisters, who reside here. The sisters are:

Mrs. J. H. Riley
Mrs. W. F. Collins
Mrs. Allen McPhee.

The deceased also has two brothers somewhere in France, who like himself enlisted from Gleichen—Sergt. Arthur and Pte. Edward. He also has a brother Omer, who enlisted in England, and another brother residing somewhere in the United States.

In respect to the third Gleichen boy to be killed in action the flag on the Town Hall was lowered to half mast. He was only 22 years of age and leaves many friends to mourn his loss. Next week we will produce a cut of the boy and by then hope to have more particulars.

It is reported that Louis J. Engstrom has been captured and made a prisoner of war by the Germans, although not officially. The story is that he was last seen trying to fight several Germans with a club.

Those who know Lue can readily believe that he would fight with anything rather than give in.

Principal H. Dexter and Mrs. McKay will spend the holidays with friends at Edmonton.

The Bow River was very high on Monday and for a time traffic over the bridge was stopped.

Miss Ishbel Gooderham has gone to Peace River Crossing to visit her sister, Mrs. Lyons, and was accompanied by Miss Bowser.

Miss Howe, of the dress goods department of the Busy Store, has gone east on a holiday. Her place is filled during her absence by Mrs. Wishart.

Owing to the heavy rain Monday the excursion train to the Calgary exhibition was poorly patronized Tuesday and many a good Yankee was sorry he stayed at home as it proved one of the finest days at the fair.

On Wednesday evening of last week a very enjoyable dance was given in the Opera House under the auspices of the American Legion boys. Another will be given very shortly in aid of patriotic funds.

A good crowd of Gleichenites took in the Dominion Day sports at Bassano and report having most thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and that the program was a good one and well carried out.

Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Chris Bartsch gave a delightful heart card party to an even dozen of her friends.

Jack McDowell has opened a cigar store and refreshment stand in the Gleichen Trading Co. block.

Million Bushel Mark Passed 1,069,684 Bu. Grain Received

Early last fall the CALL published an estimate of the grain that would be received at Gleichen as a result of last year's crop, placing it at one million bushels, which some doubted and only yesterday one elevator man said that at that time he thought it a rather high estimate.

However, the million mark has been passed and still the grain comes in and it may be that a million and a quarter may yet be the total as up to yesterday morning 1,069,684 had been received by our elevators.

Since our last report of a few weeks ago 99,450 bushels of wheat have been received, 37,950 of oats and 324 of barley. During the same time 43 carloads have been shipped from Gleichen and four from Stobart, making a total of 591 cars from here for the season and 40 from Stobart.

This is a pretty good showing considering that eight years ago there was not one elevator at Gleichen and our farmers considered a loading platform a luxury when built that fall. Now we have four elevators and two of these this year built additions nearly as large as their original buildings, while another constructed a large storehouse; and even then at times there was not sufficient room and our farmers had to wait for days until cars could be obtained.

It should be remembered this over the million mark in no way accounts for the thousands of bushels of grain kept for seed purposes and fed.

Queenstown Picnic Friday, July 14th

A Military Band to be in Attendance

You are going to the Queenstown Farmers Union picnic on Friday, July 14th? And, of course, you will take a basket of edibles to sell if you are a lady reader, and if you are a gentleman you will have the price of a basket in your jeans. The money thus obtained will all be turned over to patriotic funds, so you will be helping a good cause and filling yourself up on good things at the same time.

As the committee is bearing all the expenses every dollar received will be given to the Red Cross.

The farmers are giving special attractions this year and arrangements have been made to have a military band in attendance, and President Woods of the U. F. A. is expected to be present to make an address. The usual games, races, etc., will be indulged in and a good time generally may be anticipated in which every person is invited to join.

The picnic grounds this year will be on the south side of the Bow river opposite Cluny.

Thomas Norman Stokoe and Robert Cecil Fawcett, charged with defalcations from the Royal Bank of Canada at Gleichen, were brought before his lordship, Mr. Justice Stuart, in the supreme criminal court this morning. Both pleaded guilty, and through W. A. Macdonald pleaded for leniency. His lordship reminded them that this was the time when the Empire had need of every man at his best and allowed them their liberty on suspended sentence on the condition that they at once enlist in one of the local regiments. Only a few minutes later both were sworn in as members of the 113th, says the Calgary Herald.

Mr. and Mrs. Lafferty and their two boys left on Monday where they will remain for a couple of months before making their home permanently in Edmonton. Their many friends regret their departure from here.

SIR PENYWERN'S WIFE
— BY —
FLORENCE WARDEN

Ward, Lock & Co., Limited

Reproaching himself for his absorption in his work, Sir Penywern would have devoted himself entirely to his wife, but this she would not encourage or permit. He resolved to try to fathom the secret which she was evidently keeping from him, and in the meantime to appear to notice nothing unusual.

And so the daily life began again, with a difference; outwardly they were the same, but for the increased pallor of the young wife, the look of anxious expectancy in her blue eyes, the furtive glances she cast from time to time around her, the strange silence into which she fell.

Then, one night, he tried to persuade her to confess to him what it was that troubled her.

"You have had some fright, some shock, I'm sure of it," he said, "Tell me what it is, and you may depend upon me, dear, to do nothing but what you wish in the matter, whatever it may be."

But Daphne shook her head, and with a forced laugh, pretended to be much surprised at the question. She had had no shock, no fright. She was perfectly well, perfectly happy. She hoped he was not going to be worried in his work by the thought that there was anything the matter with her.

If he had doubted that she was keeping some secret from him, he could doubt it no longer. Her hurried, furtive manner, the quick-drawn breath, the forced high spirits, all were pitiful indications that something was wrong.

If there had been between them the strong and equal devotion upon which his heart was set, all would have been well; passionate appeal would have drawn out passionate reply, and full confidence would have been established between them. As it was, he seemed to her a little hard, from his very self-control; and she seemed to him not only cold, but secretive and deceitful.

So he withdrew, wounded and resentful, to brood over the matter, and to torture himself in conjectures as to what it might be that his wife was concealing from him; while, she on her side, took more pains than ever to hide from her husband that change which, the more she tried, the less she succeeded in concealing.

Things went on this way until one afternoon in May, wet, dark and windy. Sir Penywern came home from the nearest town, and entering the hall, asked for his wife.

"My lady in the study, Sir Penywern," Rathbone asked to see her, so I showed him in there, and her ladyship went to speak to him," said the butler, as he took his master's coat and hat.

"All right."

Sir Penywern crossed the hall, and went down the long passage which led to his study, which was a spacious apartment in the north wing of the house.

When he opened the door he was surprised to see Daphne pushing back into place the heavy morocco-covered couch that stood under one of the long windows. She drew herself up hastily as her husband entered the room, and faced him with a white face, upon which there was a quivering smile.

"Why, Pen, I didn't hear you coming," she cried, in a voice which was hoarse and tremulous. "Did you get the—the things you wanted, dear?"

Sir Penywern, suspicious and anxious, enquired in spite of himself at the duplicity which seemed to him so unnecessary and so meaningless, replied shortly, as he looked about him. One of the long windows was open, and the wind was blowing out the heavy curtains.

"Oh, yes!" he said shortly. "What had Rathbone to say to you?"

Daphne shivered.

"I—I haven't seen him yet," said she.

He looked at her steadily, but she did not wait for him to speak.

"Let us go into the conservatory," said she, "and have a talk. I've got a little request to make to you. I don't think you will have much trouble in granting it."

She had led him to the door, muting her hand through his arm, coaxing, pleading, sweet. As it was, he allowed her to lead the way back along the passage into the great glass domed house, filled with hothouse plants and flowers, which was one of the great joys of her heart. And here she made known to him her wish that he would let her go to spend a couple of days at the Garage with the Gellibrands.

He looked at her keenly.

"Yes, you can go if you wish," he said, after a moment's hesitation.

"Only I am sorry, that you have any confidence to make, that you could not make it to me."

She rose quickly out of the wicker chair into which she had sunk. She seemed to be on the point of breaking down. Her white face, glassy eyes, her moist and trembling hands, all betrayed some terrible agitation which she was doing her best to conceal.

"There's nothing, nothing," she said shortly.

He rose in his turn, suddenly stern, terrible.

"You're deceiving me," he said in a hard tone.

She shivered again, tried to deny, drew a long breath, and shaking her head dully, took a step away, tottered and then, gathering her forces as she heard his step behind her, fled out of the conservatory up to her own little surgery.

Sir Penywern ran a few steps in pursuit, stopped short and, changing his mind, returned to his study.

The wind was still blowing out the curtains, and the drizzling rain was coming in.

He crossed the room slowly, with the intention of pulling down the sash, and as he did so, he trod upon something hard. Stooping, he found that the object upon which he had stepped was a five-numbered revolver, fully loaded, locked in one of the drawers of a bureau in the corner of the room.

He examined it in astonishment, and discovered that two of the chambers had been discharged. At first he was only vaguely amazed, but gradually his surprise began to assume a more sinister form.

The coincidence of the discovery with the agitation shown by his wife could not fail to strike him, and then to cause him infinite vague alarm.

Had the secret distress from which she was suffering led her to make an attempt to make away with herself?

The horrible question was followed at once by another: What was she doing with the sofa when he came in?

Sir Penywern glanced at the couch, which was by his time a mere undefined black mass in the shadow of the darkening room.

Slowly, scarcely knowing what he feared, he made his way towards it. Just for a moment he waited, drawing deep breaths, with his hand upon the habitually worn.

Then, with one quick movement, he dragged it from its place. With deepening horror he saw that there was something underneath it, something dark, bulky, shapeless, motionless.

Down on the floor he went, and turned over the shapeless thing.

It was the dead body of Ben Rathbone.

CHAPTER III.

The discipline of the soldier came to Sir Penywern's aid as he experienced the greatest shock he had hitherto known.

At first his impulse was to summon assistance. Fenner, the butler, as an old soldier, a legacy of the hero's dead father; he was devoted, discreet, absolutely to be depended upon.

A least, so Sir Penywern had always believed.

Now, for the first time, face to face with this terrible, inexplicable tragedy, in which his own wife was somehow involved, Sir Penywern experienced a doubt even of Fenner.

He had sprung to his feet on ascertaining the identity of the dead man, and taken an instinctive step towards the bell. But he did not take another step. There followed close upon the heels of the first impulse a second, which he resolved to obey. He would confide in no one until he had made, by himself, the fullest investigation that was possible.

This would give him time to review the facts as he knew them, to make up his mind as to what he should do.

For he was threatened, whatever happened and whatever explanation there might be of this occurrence with the distress and annoyance of such a scandal as had never before darkened the family history. A dead man, a dependent of the household, found concealed under a sofa in his study! Here indeed was a mystery such as the world loves, and as the press make the very most of it with interviews, circumstantial details, and numerous special editions!

All these considerations rushed pell-mell through the baronet's mind as he knelt down once more beside the body of Rathbone, and proceeded to make a leisurely examination of it.

There was a little blood on the man's clothes, on the left-hand lapel of the old coat of Sir Penywern's which he was wearing, and there was a wound on the waistcoat underneath. On unbuttoning this, the baronet found the shirt more deeply stained, and these indications sufficed to lead him to a wound in the left breast which he recognized as the work of a bullet.

Further examination resulted in the discovery of another bullet wound. This was in the back, on the left-hand side, and it had bled but little like the other.

Sir Penywern laid the body down on the floor and got up, his mind working quickly as he crossed the room; turned the key in the lock, and looking keenly round him, sought for indications, by the help of which he might make some sort of reconstruction of the tragedy, as it might, nay, as it must have occurred.

And first, he examined the vicinity of the window, which was open.

The room, which was a magnificent one, some forty feet long by twenty wide, and fourteen or fifteen feet high, had four windows: two in the front of the house, facing the south, and two more at the end, facing east.

From these two last there was a full view of the sea, and it was one of these which was open. There were no suspicious marks on the window sill to suggest that any intruder had got in by that means, and none on the morocco-covered chair which stood beneath it.

There were indeed some signs of recent disturbance in the fact that the coal-scuttle had been upset, and its contents scattered close to the hearth rug, in the appearance of a heap of papers which had been neatly placed on the big table between the two south windows, and in the changed position of one or two of the chairs.

But there were no marks of stains visible on the carpet, and none on the gravel outside the open window.

Sir Penywern picked up his revolver, and carried it across the room to the bureau in which he usually kept it locked up. To his surprise he found it unlocked, the drawer in which he himself had placed the weapon not many weeks before. He had then turned the key himself upon it, and had never doubted the perfect security in which he had left it.

When, how, and by whom had it been taken out?

The answer began to seem clear. It was Rathbone who, in his occupation about the house, cleaning the windows carrying coal, and so on, must have found out the revolver, perhaps picked the lock of the drawer in the hope of finding something of more value.

Sir Penywern had from the first disapproved of his wife's indiscriminating kindness to casual strangers, and had yielded against his better judgment to her entreaties that he would give work about the place to this chance-met tramp with the haggard checks and plenteous whine.

The man had proved to be a surprisingly efficient worker in his humble way after all, but this fact had strengthened, if anything, the mistrust with which his employer and the servants regarded him.

Belgian Woman Undaunted

Refuses to Give German Authorities
Names of Persons Receiving
Letters by Secret Courier

The latest story of heroism that comes from Belgium has to do with a Belgian woman, a resident of one of the suburbs of Brussels. It is told in a letter received in Toronto, that was smuggled across the Belgian frontier, having been carried from Brussels by special courier, an operation, incidentally, which is extremely hazardous in view of the more rigorous German restrictions, and the imposition of the death penalty upon anyone found carrying letters or disposing of papers or intelligence that would in any way apprise the Brussels of the true conditions that obtained in the outer world.

This particular Belgian woman of courage and bravery had been for months without news of her husband, an officer in the Belgian army, until finally she discovered one of the agencies through which she could have that intelligence for which she yearned. But the Germans gained possession of one of the letters with the result that the woman was placed under arrest. It happened that a number of people received letters by the same courier and the Germans immediately determined that they would execute the courier and punish the parties who were contributors to this latest infraction of German law. When they demanded the names from the woman whom they had placed under arrest they were met by a stern refusal. Every method conceivable was employed, but the brave woman remained obdurate. She told the German Governor that she would rather go down to her death honorably than to expose her friends.

Today that woman—one of the leaders of Brussels society in the days when German kultur was unknown in a Brussels prison under threat of death. She will not surrender and if she needs must die she will die as thousands of other Belgian women have died—bravely and nobly in a cause that is more precious than life.

One of my ancestors was a signer of the Declaration of Independence."

"Indeed," replied the haughty Lady.

"Well, an ancestor of mine was one of the men who helped draw up the paper and who told the others where to sign their names."—Washington Star.

Wittenberg Prison-Camp Horror
In reply to a question by Mr. Malcolm, M. P., who asked him whether any, and, if so, what efforts were made by his majesty's government to secure an independent medical inspection of the prisoner camp at Wittenberg during the many months that this camp remained unvisited, owing to the prevalence of typhus, by the American ambassador in Berlin or by any of his staff.

Lord R. Cecil states: "The Germans permitted no kind of communication either by letter or orally as to the conditions of Wittenberg during the months in question, and the government had, I need not say, no suspicion of the horrors that were going on there, or of the gross and criminal cowardice of the German medical staff in abandoning their duties to those under their charge. Neither our allies whose prisoners in the camp were far more numerous than ours, nor we demanded independent medical examination of the camp, and on behalf of the government I can only express profound regret that we so under-estimated the brutality of our enemies."—The London Times.

The growing of even a few vegetables by twice as many people as have vegetable gardens at present would enormously simplify some of our economic problems, and give to so many more thousands of families fresher and more healthful vegetable food. Considered in relation to a few families, this may seem of small interest, but the cumulative would be of great national importance.

"One of my ancestors was a signer of the Declaration of Independence."

"Indeed," replied the haughty Lady.

"Well, an ancestor of mine was one of the men who helped draw up the paper and who told the others where to sign their names."—Washington Star.

An Ancient City

Trebizond was one of the Most Notable Cities of the East in the Middle Ages

Trebizond, the old capital of Cappadocia, is mentioned by Milton in one of his gorgeous catalogues of places in the first book of "Paradise Lost," where he refers to the knights who once jested there. The city, indeed was one of the great schools of medieval chivalry, and it is German historian, Professor Fallmerayer, who tells us that "it became in popular romance and in the imaginations of the Italians and Provencals, one of the most famous empires of the East, and the rallying point of the youth and flower of Asia." Readers of "Ivanhoe" may remember that the templars boasts to Rebecca that he had won his horse, Zamor, in single fight from the Sultan of Trebizond.

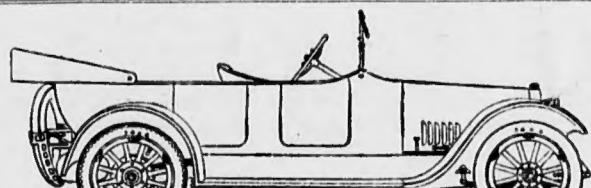

Apart from its classical association with Xenophon and the retreat of the ten thousand, Trebizond was one of the most notable cities of the East in the middle ages. The Hellenic Trapezus, or "Tableland" so named from the sloping table of ground on which it stands, at the time of the fourth crusade fell into the hands of Alexius Comnenus, a scion of the Imperial Byzantine family, who founded there an empire that lasted for two and a half centuries, and included the greater part of the southern coast of the Black Sea. The Imperial family were renowned for their beauty, and Princesses of Trebizond were sought in marriage by Byzantine Emperors, western nobles and Mohammedan Princes.—The London Chronicle.

Will Feed Poland

The British government has agreed to a plan whereby the civilian population of Poland may be fed by the American commission.

The agreement specifies certain additions to German guarantees covering the distribution of food before the permission becomes effective.

The chief points in the additions proposed by the British government to the German guarantees are stipulations providing that the relief shall apply to Russian Poland as a whole instead of to the portion occupied by the Germans, and an undertaking on the part of the German and Austrian governments adequately to feed Serbia, Albania and Montenegro.

Remember this—Power is the thing which makes or mars motoring pleasure and satisfaction. Other things may have a stronger appeal to the inexperienced eye, but eventually all motorists discover that power is the great essential.

And remember this—You can't have sufficient power in your motor car unless the motor is of the Valve-in-Head type. Racing drivers, almost to a man, use cars with Valve-in-Head motors. They know from years of experience that you absolutely cannot get sufficient power from any except a Valve-in-Head motor.

Finally, remember this—"McLaughlin" motor cars always have had Valve-in-Head motors, and developed to the highest point of efficiency yet attained in automobile engineering.

By the Roadside

We have heard a lot of discussion about improving the roadside fronts of farms by tree planting and weed cutting. There is little more to be said on the subject. It remains for someone in each community to work out an object lesson. If only one farm owner along a main travelled road in the vicinity of a county seat will clean up his roadside, keep the grass clipped and plant a row of fruit or nut trees, it will not be long before the idea spreads throughout the county.

Such movements need agitation, but they need demonstration more. This is the kind of improvement that will require a long time for general adoption, and pioneers in every community are needed. There are plenty of experts ready to advise what to do if you are ready to be one of the leaders.—The Country Gentleman.

24 Bomb Craters Encircle Farmhouse

A very remarkable escape is described by the inmates of a farmhouse surrounded by a ring of 24 bomb craters completely encircled by a ring of two-foot high bomb craters, only about three feet to the walls. But though all the windows and doors were blown in, frames and all, and splinters from the bombs scattered the rooms, not one of the family suffered the slightest injury. The farm which, failing to get out of the way, had to keep in the lawn only a few feet from the craters.

Miss Worms, Powder, never failed to attack the warning and sped them from the system. They are now a sun-destroyer, but as a highly barking dog, which is a great help in rectifying weak digestion and restoring the delicate system to healthiness. ### Needs Teaching

Yeh from the nursery brought the mother, who found the baby deeply gullible.

"Never mind, darling," she cooed, "I have the doctor here to help you."

"What's that?" she cried, "what's the matter with baby?"

"It's a cold, silly, billy," she said, "only baby can't know."

Minard's Liniment Lumberman's Friend.

A member of the crew of the late ship "M. S. Arctic" who had been taken ill at sea, William A. Arctus was taking in oil fuel before leaving port when he fell from the crane on to the deck. He was taken to the infirmary and treated and caressed to return to the doomed vessel. She had never landed, however, and the crew regarded her defection as an ill omen.

To lessen the smoke nuisance an inverted umbrella, which looks much more like the umbrella than the inverted umbrella, had to be used and not fitting it so that the coat and cylinder drop to the ground.

Save the Potato Crop Neglect of Treatment Causes Heavy Annual Loss

From 1915 to 1916 the average annual yield of potatoes in Alberta was 29,600,000 bushels, constituting one of the largest crops ever raised. The yield, however, is greatly lessened by the ravages of diseases and insects. The potato blight, which was one of the worst in years for late blight, was the most serious disease.

The Central Experimental Farm observes that, in one case, the disease amounted to about 2,000,000 bushels not including the 100,000 bushels of seed potatoes used for treatment and home use selected. For early and late blight, a 50 per cent. copper sulphate mixture is very effective. By adding 100 lbs. of lime to each acre, the blight potato beetle is also kept in check.

There are many other diseases which demonstrate clearly the practical value of spraying with bordeaux mixture, lime sulphur, or copper sulphate. Experiment Station experiments have shown that the blight potato beetle can be controlled by spraying with bordeaux mixture.

RUB ON NERVILINE

You'll be astonished at the rapid pain relieving action of "Nerviline," the most powerful, safe and reliable penetrating power—it strikes quickly, sticks to the very core of the treated area.

Nerviline is stronger, many times stronger than any other liniment. It's not greasy, ill-smelling or disagreeable. It gives you a sense of brilliant comfort and healing wherever applied.

You will scarcely believe how it will

Suggest Free Hospitals for Alberta

"Whereas the number of nurses and doctors in the rural communities of Alberta is inadequate to meet the needs of the people; and the scale of fees charged by the members of these professions is so high that few settlers can afford the attention and services necessary to properly safeguard the life and health of their families except at exorbitant cost; and the accommodation for the proper nursing and care of the sick is inadequate and unsuitable:

"And whereas the loss of life and health, owing to these conditions, is so great as to constitute a serious national loss and a grave menace to the happiness and welfare of the people:

"Therefore we, the undersigned hereby petition the Government of the Province of Alberta to take the necessary procedure to inaugurate a system of public hospitals as complete and gratuitous as our public schools.

"And we recommend that these hospitals be built, maintained and administered by the local municipalities wherever possible; that the cost of these hospitals be defrayed by a tax on the land in the municipalities wherever possible; that these hospitals be under the direction of an adequate staff of registered nurses, who shall be paid on a scale commensurate with the scale for this class of service throughout the country; and wherever possible qualified doctors be engaged as heads of the hospitals, or that an arrangement be made guaranteeing a minimum salary to a doctor in order that such a person shall be located within a reasonable distance of the hospital.

"And we recommend that the service of this institution and staff be free to the people residing in the municipalities, according to the need of each person.

"And we recommend that the government of this province pass legislation making the provision of adequate public hospital accommodation compulsory upon municipalities; that the government organize a department to have charge of the enforcement of this law and to assist the municipalities in providing the accommodation in the most economical way consistent with a high standard of efficiency.

"And we recommend that this province institute a complete system of hospital inspection and licensing of all hospitals other than public hospitals, with the purpose of maintaining a high standard of service in all institutions where the health of the people is cared for.

"And we further recommend that the government of this province take whatever steps are possible to enable municipalities to take over and administer, in conformity with this plan for free public hospitals, all hospital institutions now administered by incorporated bodies, associations or societies, which are dependent for their proper maintenance upon grants or public money, or which have been built by grants of public money for public hospital purposes; and that this province cease to grant public money to any hospital institutions other than the public hospitals as provided in this plan."

By request we publish below a copy of a petition which the Free Public Hospital League of Calgary is undertaking to present to the Government of Alberta. It should be carefully read as it effects your health and taxes:

It is pointed out there are only 39 hospitals receiving government grants in this province. Twelve of these are in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. Four others are located in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat and Vegreville. These are merely adequate to meet the need of the urban population, when that need is fully and freely met. Thus there are only 24 small hospitals in the small towns of the province, to furnish accommodation to a rural population of over 350,000 people. It is estimated at one cent an acre a free hospital can be had within twenty miles of every settler with a doctor and nurses. Write to Mrs. Wm. Hale 1717 Twentieth Avenue West, Calgary, for information.

And now this district is to be advertised in motion pictures by the C. P. R. and a producer is now here getting up an educational film to show the process of farming by means of irrigation.

Irrigation in the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Block is no longer an experiment, the year 1914 having absolutely demonstrated its success wherever intelligently applied.

You can buy irrigated land from the Canadian Pacific Railway at prices ranging from $35 to $75 per acre, with twenty years to pay and the privilege of a loan of $2,000.00 for improvements (6% interest); no principal payment at end of first or second years and no water rental for first year. ### MOBILIZE CANADA'S ECONOMIC RESOURCES

Canadian War Correspondent Breaks New Ground—Organization and Specialization

Mr. Britton Cooke, one of the best known Canadian newspaper men at the front, has recently written a brilliant article which he calls "The Organization of Canada's Resources." Mr. Cooke believes that Canada's economic development will be seriously impaired in the years following the war unless immediate steps are taken to mobilize the productive forces of the country with a view to making Canada more self-contained.

After dwelling on the penalty of inefficiency, Mr. Cooke puts Canada's position, as he sees it, in the following paragraph:

Economic Autonomy Necessary

Canada's political autonomy has been hotly defended at all times. The economic autonomy of the country has been little considered. The defeat of Reciprocity in 1911 was regarded as a sort of economic Declaration of Independence against the United States. It came late, and how real that independence really was and is may be estimated by a careful perusal of the lists of Canadian exports of Canadian produce to the United States, and the imports into Canada of United States goods for Canadian consumption. How the trade organizations of our neighboring republics affect Canada may be observed in the operations of the United States Fruit Trust in the Canadian West where, although British Columbia fruit is just as good, if not better, and although the Oregon and Washington products has to pay duty to enter Canada, yet one finds that fruit excluding the Canadian fruit in the shops of Calgary and Edmonton. How the old-established trade connections of the United States suck Canadian raw materials into United States mills there to be prepared for export by people of that country instead of by Canadians, thence to be carried by United States railways to United States ports instead of by Canadian roads to Canadian ports—may be studied in the operations of the Chicago packing houses who draw Canadian live stock in the Chicago "transforming market," kill the animals, dress and pack the meat, prepare the by-products, ship the main quantities through the forty-million consuming market of the Eastern United States, allowing the surplus to spill into the export channels at New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and meantime actually sell back to Canada the fertilizers, lard, soap, leather and even beef and beef extracts made from Canadian cattle. Older establishment, greater specialization in the various departments of production, and more efficient marketing and distributing organization—these three factors menace the economic integrity of Canada.

WORK UP RAW MATERIALS AT HOME

People of the United States—for whom in this regard one can feel nothing but respect—are slowly forcing Canada to engage in the less profitable departments of production: wheat-growing, the supplying of ore, timber, pulp, fish—unfinished materials for United States workmen to finish and transform, directly or indirectly, into export commodities. Fifty cents worth of a Canadian raw material may become, in the hands of foreign workmen, ten dollars' worth of goods when finished and, possibly, sold back to Canadians. To Canada comes the fifty cents as Canada's fee for the material. To the foreigner goes the $0.50 for finishing, for the office expenses of the makers and marketers, for advertising, for wages to salesmen! The efficiency of the United States business organizations—made robust by a high protective tariff and still well-protected—is making a permanent impression upon the slowly forming economic character of Canada. Already there are parts of Canada where it does not pay to grow cauliflower because of the cauliflower specialization centred in Maryland. When peace in Europe is restored and the shattered nations are to be rebuilt, it will be the efficient nation that fills its order-book with orders and its cash register with money. The less efficient nation, floundering alongside, will have the privilege of carrying the load, shovelling the coal, teaming a few loads of wheat, sweeping up the floor and fat tening itself on such crumbs of trade and profit as may fall from the rich man's table.

The remedy lies in the careful organization of Canada's resources and productive forces, coupled with defensive measures in the way of trade policies, such as our great neighbor to the south has adopted with remarkable success during the past hundred years. Canadians cannot afford to continue indefinitely as suppliers of raw material to the nations who have developed their industrial forces to a high degree of efficiency with the aid of a beneficial trade policy. There is a lesson for Canada in the development of the United States.

It is practical patriotism to give the preference to goods "Made-in-Canada," and it is practical self-interest as well. Your money stays in Canada—lives up Canadian trade generally—and so helps to create a prosperity in which you share.

LOYALTY TO CANADA AND HER WORKSHOPS

Women Shoppers Can do Most for "Made-in-Canada" When They Are Making Purchases

The editor of the "Department of Magazine," a United States publication, has a strong article on the "Made-in-America" movement, which is a feature of United States commercial life to-day. Speaking of the place that women occupy in the nation's purchasing, he says:

"Upon the great mass of intelligent American women, who daily stream through the doors of our forty-five hundred department stores, rests a heavy weight of responsibility. It is for them to say whether some of the greatest industries in the country shall suffer or whether they shall come through the crisis stronger and more prosperous than ever.

"America can make everything that is necessary to the life and happiness of any man or woman. The most luxurious and beautiful fabrics can be produced here. Our carpets and rugs imitate the cunning of the Oriental weaver and often surpass his work in originality of pattern. The furniture made in America is unsurpassed, and our glass and china compare favorably with the finest importations."

The remaining three paragraphs are also taken from Mr. Platt's article, but in each case we have substituted the word "Canada" for "America," as there is no doubt that what Mr. Platt says about the goods made in United States applies equally as well to those made in Canada. In fact there is an even greater reason why Canada should be loyal to the products of her own workpeople and her own workshops. Canada is a young country in the early stages of industrial development. It has a small population spread thinly over a large area. Unless all interests in Canada combine to promote the general welfare, our progress is sure to be much slower than we have been accustomed to during the future years of reconstruction which will inevitably follow the war.

REVISED VERSION

"Made in Canada" should be the motto of every shopper who enters a store. It is more than a mere trade slogan; it is a precept of patriotism. "Made in Canada" means busy factories in Canada; it means happy working people in Canada; it means fat pay envelopes in thousands of Canadian homes on Saturday night; it means the banishment of the bugaboo of hard times and the return of prosperity for all of us despite the war. And after the war is over it means a greater Canada than ever before, a Canada that will supply the world and reap the reward of a higher patriotism than that which is being voiced by European cannoneers.

All this can be accomplished if every purchaser who enters a store will choose Canadian made goods. The great merchants are eager to meet this demand, and it is up to the shopper to see that the good things made in Canada do not lie idle on the shelves.

OUR BUSINESS INSTINCT

It's Good For Canada to Buy Canadian Goods

In a democracy like Canada manufacturers and consumers meet on a common level. Each looks to the other to do his part in this Made-in-Canada campaign. We need no paternal government to advise us. We need no ten commercial commandments as they have in Germany. This is a land of liberty. We think and speak as we like in loyalty to our own commercial interest. If we don't recognize that buying things made in this country is good for our pockets, our homes or our businesses, we naturally buy things made somewhere else. It's because we are finding out for ourselves without any paternal commandments from the supreme bureau, that it pays in every way to buy Canadian goods, that we are entering a campaign to do it. The German catalogue treats German consumers like a pack of children. The business sense of the average liberty-loving Canadian demands to be treated like a full-grown man. We don't need to be told that it's good for Canada that we buy goods made by Canadians. We know that: the same as we know that fresh air and good food are beneficial to the health. We don't even call it patriotism. It's just ordinary everyday, sensible business instinct.

It is practical patriotism to give the preference to goods "Made-in-Canada," and it is practical self-interest as well. Your money stays in Canada—lives up Canadian trade generally—and so helps to create a prosperity in which you share.

It is arithmetic to buy at our store now. We have cut our prices down. Our regular prices are always low. We simply have a lot of summer goods we want to sell out fast. They are good goods but we don't want to carry them over another year.

At the low cut prices our splendid, stylish summer goods can't last long. Come early.
